This book describes and exemplifies strategies for teaching history across the 11-19 age range in rigorous and enjoyable ways. It illustrates active learning approaches embedded in pupil-led enquiries, through detailed case studies which involve students in planning and carrying out historical enquiries, creating accounts and presenting them to audiences, in ways that develop increasingly sophisticated historical thinking. The case studies took place in a number of different localities and show how practising teachers worked with pupils during each year from Y6/7 to Y 13 to initiate, plan and implement enquiries and to present their findings in a variety of ways. Each case study is a practical example which teachers can use as a model and modify for their own contexts, showing how independent learning linked to group collaboration and peer assessment can enhance learning. Social constructivist theories of learning applied to historical thinking underpin the book, with particular emphasis on links between personalised and collaborative learning and e-learning.

If you are looking for someone, you may or may not find them with a public records search. These are often hard to do unless you are looking for someone locally. Even then, you may not find what you are looking for because of many different changes that may have occurred. You can pay someone to do this type of search for you, but they may turn up empty handed too. However, if you really don't know where someone is, and you really need to find them, this is one of the first things you can do. Discover everything you need to know by grabbing a copy of this ebook today.
