~~California Crazy: American Pop Architecture by Jim Heimann~~

A trend that peaked in 1930's Southern California, roadside pop architecture displayed a creative imagination on a massive scale. Giant doughnuts, stockings legs, coffee pots, cream cans and hot dogs all built up into grand, cartoonish permanent structures took the state by storm - because even if the ice cream is average, who doesn't want to visit an ice cream parlour built in the shape of a huge owl?
