Many pain scales for cats have been described, yet, although successfully developed in dogs, only a few pain scales have been validated in cats. Development of the Glasgow pain scale for acute pain in cats described here: 2007 GCMPS: The Glasgow composite measure pain scale for dogs suffering from acute pain was developed using psychometric methodology and measures pain to a level of precision suitable for clinical trials. For routine clinical use, where the emphasis is on speed, ease of use ...

Using acute pain scales for cats | Veterinary Record

After a surgery, or for other cases of pain management, we will use the appropriate pain scale to determine your pet's level of pain. This is like a physical exam, but it focuses on feeling the whole body for tight muscles, sores, range of motion, and heat, all while noting the discomfort level in your pet.

What to Expect with Pain Management
