Human security is also based on a multi-sectoral understanding of insecurities. Therefore, human security entails a broadened understanding of threats and includes causes of insecurity relating for instance to economic, food, health, environmental, personal, community and political security.

HUMAN SECURITY IN THEORY AND PRACTICE

If I could sum up the text in one sentence it would probably read "Human security is both independent of, and yet related to human development, human rights, states, humanitarian intervention, and international aid. That makes it as clear as mud, but there's a lengthy chapter that defines the concept and its' rationale.

Publications on Human Security – The Human Security Unit As human security has prompted an intersection between development and security, King and Murray (2001: 589) have described the birth of the concept as a “ unifying event ” – it works as an “ organizing concept ” that enables the development of broad coalitions around specific ‘ security ’ issues without the traditional strains of narrowed, state-centric definitions of security that have previously hindered multi-party cooperation.

A Critical Evaluation of the Concept of Human Security Defining the Concept of Security. The 'security' is multidimensional and complex connotation which is co-existed since human civilization came into being. The security is conceivably a paramount necessity to the existence of individuals and the survival of any nation-state.
There is no perennial definition of security to satisfy every age and phase.
