Strategic Restructuring. Strategic restructuring is a term increasingly used to refer to a broad continuum of options for organizational partnerships, including but not limited to mergers, asset transfers, joint ventures, administrative or back office consolidations, joint programs, parent-subsidiary structures, and fiscal sponsorships.

Provides research-based information that is crucial to the decision whether and how to support and foster the missions of nonprofit organizations through strategic restructuring.

In this groundbreaking book, strategy expert David La Piana introduces "Real-Time Strategic Planning," a fluid, organic process that engages staff and board in a program of systematic readiness and continuous responsiveness. You'll find tools for clarifying your competitive advantage; generating a strategy screen--criteria for evaluating strategies to be able to respond quickly; handling big questions; developing and testing strategies; and implementing and adapting strategies.

This book details six stories of nonprofit leaders who chose a merger strategy for their nonprofit organizations, and in the process, became "mission-centered" leaders who refuse to be ruled, or biased by their fears about their own career. Mission-centered leaders help their organizations' impact grow and go on to prosper themselves. The book details six common steps in the letting-go process each leader went through, and includes advice for other leaders who are considering a merger strategy.

Rhode Island. A case study of this merger reveals that these organizations merged not primarily as a defensive reaction to financial challenges, an account consistent with resource dependency theory, but because of the merging organizations' realization that conditions were right for proactive strategic restructuring that could make the resulting nonprofit a more effective social change agent. The merger process was aided by several key factors. First, a passionate "champion" board member with ties to both organizations facilitated the merger. Second, creative solutions were devised to reconcile the merging organizations' stark differences in organizational culture. Also, the anticipated roles members of the merging organizations would play in the new organization were clearly defined during merger negotiations, mitigating post-merger conflict. The findings also suggest that it is unclear whether the increased frequency of nonprofit mergers is generally a positive or negative for the sector as a whole; while there may be reductions in service-delivery quality in markets monopolized by one nonprofit, nonprofit mergers can also act as a counteragent to mission drift, making service-delivery and organizations more efficient and effective. Finally, this study's findings regarding donors' reactions to the merger suggest the need for further research about how donor networks are affected by nonprofit restructuring.
