Who's your city suggests to be a book about how to choose where you want to live. Except for one chapter, it isn't. The author writes a study WHY location matters, and rounds this study off with 10 questions by which you can make better choices about where to live. For people interested in WHY where you live matters, this may be a good book.

What I learned from this book: New York City is, statistically, the most neurotic space in the U.S.; Bakersfield sucks (I already know that, book; thanks all the same); There's something called the 'Gay/Bohemian Index' that you monied-types want your city to fall into because it means shit is about to get gentrified; I should probably make every effort to be a goatherd someplace in the Third ...

Who's Your City?: How the Creative Economy Is Making Where ...

Who's Your City?: How the Creative Economy Is Making Where You Live the Most Important Decision of Your Life is a non-fiction book written by Richard Florida. The book advances Florida's previous work on the locational choices of people and businesses. He adds a dimension of environmental psychology by assigning psychological profiles to urban regions according to the dominant personality traits of the people who live there. For example, the New York metropolitan area and the ChiPitts area have
